The publication will damage Mr. Greeley, showing, as it does, under his own sign manual, that so far from being the calm, farseeing, and philosophic journalist he was, by so many, supposed to be, he has been not only no more pure and disinterested than others of the party press, but has actually, during his whole editorial career, been trimming and intriguing to the end to elevate himself to office. This, which was before understood by but the few, will now become known to the many. Honest Horace, the self-denying patriot and incorruptible reformer will come to be looked upon as a mere mythological creation—a suit of shabby apparel endowed with apocryphal virtues through the liberality of the popular imagination; while the real personage will emerge in his true charactera thing of many pretenses, all put on with a view to his own advancement to official dignities and emoluments.

In his political history it does not appear that Mr. Greeley has been any more influenced by considerations of principle, or any more scrupulous in respect to matters of policy, than politicians in general; while there are reasons to believe that he has, toward his party associates, been a good deal more than ordinarily exacting and pragmatical. The key to his character us a politician is, as some are aware, an intense lesire of immediate party success; his favorite line of policy consisting in expedients to secure such success, irrespective of other con-sequences. Conceited through the reputation he has acquired, there is no doubt that, on the strength of his power as editor of the Tribune, he has so lorded it over the leaders of the party, and so much to the damage of the party itself, as to render them, in a high degree, indisposed to raward him for his labors by the desired promotion, or to add to his influence by placing official power in his hands. This will doubtless account for a part of the apparent ingratitude of Mr. Seward toward the junior member of the political firm of which he was the head; nor is it by any means certain that Messrs. Seward and Weed did not understand the constitutional idiosyncracies of the philosopher of the Tribune much better than he did himself, and decide much more correctly. If they judged that he had, without office, all that he could carry with safety to himself, or his friends, who can show reasons to impage the correctness of their opinion?

Whether Mr. Seward is greatly damaged by the publication of the letter, is a question not easily decided. If that gentleman is to be, in future, outside the Presidential caste, be is beyond its serious effects. A letter written to a man, ought not, prima facie, to work him much injury; otherwise it is in the power of every spiteful gentlemen, with a literary turn, to become a mischief-maker. The means by which the publication of this epistle was brought about, however, were set n motion by Mr. Seward or by his confidential friend, Lieutenant-Governor Raymond; and as he has thus made it part of the res gestas in a case sought to be instituted against Mr. Greeley, he must abide by all the logical consequences of such an act-the principal of which are an implied confession of the truth of the charges of injustice and ingratitude to a political partner in business therein con-

To kick down the ladder by the aid of glect and keep in a state of suppression the implements which they have employed to gain their ends, is so much the practice of politicians, that it is difficult to pronounce clearly whether it is a vice or a necessity. Quando mos erat," says St. Augustine, "crimen non erar"-custom is no offense; and certainly there is nothing better sanctioned by immemorial usage than the practice of politicians to overlook the claims of such as have aided to their elevation. It may be that Providence thus provides for the punishment of sycophaucy; but upon this point, in the presence of those who are much better advised than we can be, touching the divine ordinances, we prefer not to dogmatize. It is possible, however, that Providence, in overlooking the case, took cognizance of other parties beside, those that composed the firm of Seward and company-the people for example; and as a penalty for neglecting or betraying the wider interest, refused to allow the junior, as it has since the senior member. to realize the bonors and emoluments contemplated by the copartnership.

The truth is that politicians in influence or in power find it necessary to employ all they have to give in the purchasing of new, rather than in the rewarding of old friends. This necessity Mr. Greeley should have taken into the account, and either provided for payment in advance, or refrained from expecting it altogether. And this brings us to the place for a few remarks upon the condition and necessities of a party editor: Of all the trades or callings into which, for the sin of our first parents, man has been required to fall-or fall-of a subsistence, that of editor of a party journal is, at once, the most anomalous and the most melancholy. It is happy for many who are condemned to that estate that they never arrive at a full consciousness of the depth, intensity and universality of the servitude to which they are subjected. They wander through existence, as people in a fog, doubting what manner of men they are. They wear chains, which they conventionally believe to be ornaments, and tling them to consideration. Supposed to be ples, the party editor is one whose opinion are dictated by others without his consent and irrespective of his convictions. Nomthe guardian of the public be supposed that men would come with rectance. Far from it. The party editor glories in his calling. For the success of those principles which he has prescribed him, and the election of those men who have been chosen without giving him a voice in the matter, he is ready to infor and sacrifice; yea, he does labor and sacrifice; and a hurra now and then over the result of an election, empty pockets, and, at the very best, a formal resolution of thanks, after great victory, by some party body or other, or a cold recommendation to a clerkship in a Washington department, constitute the sum its effects, some of which it is not difficult to total of his rewards. Certainly no human occupation can be half so thankless as his. Does he exert himself to the utmost to secure a victory, he does no more than his duty. Are they XXXVIII CONGRESS-FIRST SESSION. defeated, what party so convenient upob which to throw the blame as the editor Has he any notions of the policy that ought to be pursued, they are overruled. Does he open his columns to all the scribblers of the party, he is condemned for admitting such trash into his paper. Does he refuse to make his sheet a receptacle for communicated folly or falsehood, he is pronounced envious or cowardly. In short, do as he may, the number of his enemies in the party will be greater than the number of his friends; and precisely in proportion as he sacrifices is he rendered powerless, and in proportion as he is powerless, is he contemned and neglected. His natural destiny is to work as long as there is work in him-his importance diminishing in proportion as his term of service elongates-and in the end to be turned out, like a broken-down horse, to die on a common. From this consummation Mr. Greelev is sayed through other than party instrument-relative value of the parties in their estima-

Mr. Douglas has seen fit to denounce the publication of his speeches in the Lincoln-Douglas Debates, by Follett, Foster & Co., as unfair, and, he says, "especially against the alterations and mutilations in the reports of my speeches." - These are serious charges, and if true, the nature of the case is such that Mr. Douglas can prove them to a demonstration; and when he makes such charges against a work in which the publishers have invested considerable money, and which involves their integrity, he should prove them. But, as far as he shows, the unfairness consists in publishing the debates without submitting them to Mr. Douglas for revision, while Mr. Lincoln had an opportunity to revise his. This arose naturally from the fact that this publication was made at the request of the friends of Lincoln in Ohio, and he was called on for his speeches. This gave him an oppor-tunity to revise them. Whether he did so, or to what extent, we presume Mr. Douglas does not know. But Mr. Douglas's speeches were copied from the Chicago Times, his own organ, as furnished to it by his own reporter. There may have been verbal errors, inseperable from stenographic reporting, but it is hardly probable that any important ones bardly probable that any important ones could have escaped the notice of Mr. Donglas's reporter and the editor of the Times, saying nothing of their afterward coming to the notice of Mr. Douglas and of his vigilant friends.—There certainly was no intentional unfairness, and it does not seem probable that there was any at all. The publication of these debates was extensively advertised for more than six months, with the correspondence between the Committee and Mr. Lincoln, and it was not till several months after their publication, and after the nomination of Lincoln, that Mr. Douglas makes to sustain his alleged "alterations" and "mutilations," are that they "have been mutilated, and, in some respects, the meaning changed. and, in some respects, the meaning changed, by the emission of interrogatories and expressions of approbation and disapprobation by persons in the crowd, to which my remarks were made responsive, but by the omission of which my remarks seem incoherent or unintelligible." It is not usual for men engaged in debate to digress largely in reply to remarks of the crowd; at any rate, these remarks can not be regarded as the important part of the debate. If there were any such left out, it would not affect the coherency of Mr. Douglas's replies to Lincoln. The proof of the charge of alteration and mutilation, when sifted, will proba-bly amount to nothing but the fact that the reporter's notes of applause were left out of the speeches of both.

Mr. Douglas requests that his letter be published with future editions of the debates; that is, that Follett, Foster & Co. should publish, as a preface to their book, a letter invalidating its authenticity by charges which are not sustained by a particle of proof, and which they know to be unfounded. Mr. Douglas has no proprietorship in his mublic speeches that warrants him in asking such a thing, and if the demand were not a signal of distress, it would be a remarkable specimen of modesty.

A New Judicial Dispensation Wanted. The citizens of the Seventeenth Ward have asked the City Council for a doubletrack street railway from Washington-street to the Corporation Line. We have rarely seen such an instance of ingratitude, both to the Council and the Superior Court. It strained the wisdom and integrity of the City Council to protect the streets from being obstructed by double-track roads. By this exercise of inscrutable municipal wisdom, the city secured that wonderful system of street milroads which can be traveled but in one

The Superior Court also came to the rescue, and law and logic were strangely jumbled by Judge Storer to save the streets from being obstructed by double-tracks. It was in this great judicial effort that the which they actually exhibit as badges enti- legal and logical result was obtained that the right to lay two tracks is the right to lay the special embodiment of important princibut the right to lay one track has no logical

Now the citizens of the Seventeenth Ward inally the guardian of the public against the accession of bad men to places of power, it is his business to give his cordial support to whomsoever his party may select, however fully he may be advised of their unfitness for the post to which they have been designisted. For every act of the party, however wrong, he is expected to discover the means of a triumphant vindication; and for every man, however base, to invent a most faultless and shining character.

have field a public meeting, and in the face of this municipal and judicial wisdom, have unanimously asked for a double-track road, on the ground that it is less obstruction to the street than a single one. The astonishment of Mr. Bumble, the beadle, when Oliver asked for more, may give an idea of the committee when after all his double and twisted logal decisions to protect the citizens from more than one track, they ask for more. Like the devout colored person who "had the power," much to the damage of his new clothes, under the mistaken idea that Whitfield was preaching, the party is as densely crowded as on Saturday. The procession will reach the City thronged.

The Cincinnati and Dayton Tunnel Rail-

By a report in the Sunday Passa, of a meet-ing of the citizens of Madisonville, to take some measures to aid in the construction of the Dayton and Cincinnati Railroad and Tunnel, it was noticed that the citizens proposed to place half of their several tracts of land at the disposal of the company, at their present fairly-estimated value.

As this will place in the control of the company a large quantity of land which will be very desirable to our citizens for resi-dences, and will be greatly enhanced in value in case the Tunnel is completed, the way and terms on which these lands are to be disposed of would be a matter of considerable interest to the public.

The resolution retaining Mr. Anderson in his seat was adopted.

The vote was, year 114, comprising all the Republicans and Southern Opposition present, against 61 mays being Democrate acclusively. On motion of Mr. Stratton it was resolved that compensation be allowed to Mr. Chrisman up to the present time.

The House then proceeded to act on the amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation Bill, concurring in all reported in the Committee of the Whole, on Saturday, some of which were mentioned in that day's report.

Mr. Winslow made a minority report from the Covode Committee. He made a personal explanation, to the effect that the charge against Mr. Scranton was from a written communication, giving the names of forty-four witnesses. In a conversation with the writer he discovered that he had been somewhat deceived, and informed the Committee that he wished to prosecute the matter no farther, and now took pleasure in saying that nothing whatever had been brought to light reflecting in any manner on that gentleman's character.

Mr. Campbell said this explanation was still more an exceptional case, is one upon which men will differ in proportion to the

Mr. Campbell said this explanation was creditable to Mr. Winslow's head and heart, who could have been actuated by no other desire than to discharge his duty in the premises. The Democratic party, he states, has mortgaged its existence on the one idea of negro slavery, and that it is wholly sectional, and has in various instances endangered the equality of the co-ordinate branches of the Government and attempted to degrade the Judiciary by striving to make it the passive register of party decrees in most, if not all, things.

New York, June 18.—The Japanese, yesterday, were wholly free from disturbance. They have passed no other day so quietly since their arrival in this country. The Embassadors and some of the higher officers will, at noon to-dey, visit the City Hall, and be formally welcomed by Mayor Wood. The possibility of a visit to Boston is yet doubtful.
